Historical Note:

In 1973, with the help of Professor Walter Creese, Frank Heitzman began an architectural survey of Champaign and Urbana. Initially, the project was meant to document a few structures that were stylistically significant and of an architectural aesthetic, but the project quickly evolved into a street-by-street visual inspection on the part of the surveyor. After a visual inspection proved a structure to be of aesthetic interest, Heitzman photographed the structure from the best angle and stapled a photographic negative to a 4" by 6" index card that contained pertinent information about the structure. In the end, Heitzman compiled close to 600 of these index cards and wrote an architectural report on Champaign and Urbana which complemented the Illinois Survey of Historic Places survey.

Scope and Content Note:

The collection contains a copy of the manuscript, The Architectural Survey of Champaign-Urbana, along with 595 informational cards measuring 4" by 6" from the survey described therein. Originally, most cards had one or more photographs measuring 1" by 1.25" attached via staple. These were later removed and housed in an envelope with the informational card. Each card contains information about the subject structure that may include: negative file number; street address and city; type of use; date built; name of architect, contractor, or developer; name of original owner; original use of building; name of present owner; present use of building; original style of building; alterations to the building; citations; overall condition.

Arrangement:

The index cards are arranged alphabetically by city name then alphabetically by street name, and numerically by house number. When applicable, street names containing east are filed before west, and north are filed before south.

The cards are arranged in the order they were presented in the manuscript. The larger categories of Champaign, Urbana, Champaign Public Sculpture, University of Illinois Public Sculpture, and Urbana Public Sculpture were retained. The category of Unclassified was added for one card that was included in the collection, but was unlisted in the survey. The two key cards for the survey, which explain the items on the informational cards, are located at the beginning of the collection. Also included is a copy of the manuscript for the survey.
